

a tail interconnected with the rear end of the body housing;

[first connecting means for connecting the head to the body housing with the neck extending partially into the body housing through the throat area;]

[a first counterweight interconnected with the neck by a first arm attached to the neck, the first counterweight balancing the head assembly;]

second connecting means for connecting the tail to the body housing; and a second counterweight interconnected with the tail by a second arm attached to the tail, the second counterweight positioned within the body, the second counterweight balancing the tail.

10 9 connection means for interconnecting the head assembly to the body housing
11. (amended) The apparatus of claim 10 [11] wherein the <sup>9</sup> ~~first connecting means~~ compromises a hook located on an upper portion ~~of the throat area~~ of the body housing and a loop connected to an upper side of the neck, the loop positioned on the hook to hang the head assembly from the body housing and allow for both horizontal and vertical movement of the head assembly with respect to the body housing.